COURSE PROFILE

1.0 Course Description
This initial pastoral course for Diaconal Formation studies the theories and principles of human and religious development and learning. Religious development will be studied as related to cognitive, moral and emotional development, which includes life span development and faith development theories, family systems approach, and their implications for ministry in pastoral settings. Also time will be used to explore questions of human vocation, the relationship between self and others, and alternatives to the psychological paradigm.

1.1 Course Goal
As a result of the pastoral course students will
- Be exposed to theories and principles of human & religious development
- Be able to relate human & religious development dynamics one with the other
- Engage in self-reflection around issues of personal, family of origin, and vocational development
- Be able to contextualize the developing self in the context of family systems
- Be able to articulate an understanding of vocation
