COURSE DESCRIPTION: Student research on selected, relevant problems pursued under the guidance of a faculty member.

TOPICS: Research on the cultural foundations of American education and how these foundations interact with the current historical, social, and political forces in shaping American education. Special emphasis will be given to the opportunities for students to investigate special educational problems and issues.

COURSE ASSIGNMENTS:

Research the topic of various cultural forces on education.

Successfully complete examinations over the content material of the course. Develop both short and long papers that support the student’s understanding and application of the historical and current forces in society impacting K-12 education for all students, including those considered to be in special populations.

Reflection papers will be used to summarize main ideas and implications for education and how this new information might change your future actions as an educator.
